

My English 2010

By: Spencer Easton

The Following is a collective work from a normal college student whose writing has made a drastic change in the past year. Beginning as assignments to help teach about rhetoric, design, and content through these exercises and research one can come to understand a topic or issue to the fullest.

When you are forced to look at both sides so that you can write in a none bias form you really get to understand at a very deep level who you are and what you really believe in. I have found that through my writing, audiences are thinking about what they can do about issues such as (the sledophiles) teen based help groups. My research for most articles has helped me see eye to eye with my 'supposed' opposing side. This can just go to show that we are very misinformed unless we actually want to take the time to find the deep hard answers.

I have written on issues that have concerned me at the time when we were given the assignment. For instance my profile on the Sledophiles (which I am a part of) was first during winter season when we were sledding. My interesting report on Apple vs. PC that leaves you wondering why we still use Microsoft at all. My first passion being music and the instructions of how to use drum sticks. and my great concern which is the future of the world and my place in its economy. These are very important issues that have been part of my life hence the diligent and heart felt research of the topics. I have always had fazes in my life and it seams that there are papers for different.

Finding myself learning more details about certain subjects and issues I have grown not only in the practices of English writing but understanding of public concern. becoming not persuaded the opposite way by knowledge found but instead knowing of the argumentative conversation and trying to come up with my own views on topics. Their are few times when one can create something from nothing. When you are truthful to yourself and want to find answers you can fin actual thought of your on and solutions that can help you and other to the best of your abilities.

My time spent in research has been far more valuable than I would have anticipated. I have spent alot of time learning about the other side of the argument so that I could present a written description of the facts and evidence to the best of my abilities. This portfolio has some of my deepest and most precious issues and I think they mean and are the world but you would need to understand from my point of view. I do feel as if sufficient time to perfect it is not possible but for the sake of this class I do believe that it is to the standard that should require it to pass. I found myself bringing issues out that I had bottled up inside me and tried to hide from myself because I didn't understand them. When you are forced to face those doubts and uncertainties you learn so much more. I feel like this semester has helped me so much with my writing skills and thought process. I can look back to a decadent past and where I was only flowing through the motions but I have really learned so much and have tried to present it as such.
